

Caveat on Poll Data and Market Predictions

At this point, I have to apply a caveat – this century is replete with examples of poll data that later proves to have been spurious: Brexit and Trump (both 2016) spring to mind. Similarly, what the market expects a politician to do may not prove prescient; many an earnest politician discovers pragmatism when they gain office. The lesson for us all is not to make investment decisions based on poll numbers or political posturing.

Past performance is not a guide to future performance and may not be repeated. Investment involves risk.

The value of investments and the income from them may go down as well as up and investors may not get back any of the amount originally invested. Because of this, an investor is not certain to make a profit on an investment and may lose money. Exchange rate changes may cause the value of overseas investments to rise or fall.
